POETRY CONTEST FOR KIDS

Think About It by Jane Jewell

Think about it

Once a city dweller, now thriving amongst the trees.
I've found that bunnies are cuter than cracked and broken streets.
Like a piece of paper crumpled and thrown in a trash heap.
there's so much more to life than living in a multistory.

I thought I was born in the center of creation, that that was all to see.
But since I moved to Felton, I realized there were other things for me.
I rode happily on a ferry across the sea,
When I reached dry land I thought that I'd seen, all there was to being free
Till I went to Canada cause there were polar bears and that interested me.

While multistoreys have their ups and downs,
I just think forests are easier to move around.
You can zipline up and down,
No need to take a subway to get around.
It's easy and breezy with lots of oxygen,
Instead of smoke and smog.
But they both are covered up in fog.
Think about it.
